The Way We Were

If one of your New Year's resolutions was to throw out the memorabilia of your OU days, please don't. Send them instead to University Archives, which is searching for just such materials that reveal student life through the years. Scrapbooks, photos, programs, reminiscences, diaries — all can help fill gaps in the Archives' collections.

On the shelves of the Archives your materials would join the personal diary of Margaret Boyd, the University's first woman graduate; manuscripts and galleys of books by outstanding faculty such as the late Paul Murray Kendall and Distinguished Professor Emeritus of History John F. Cady; and years of official presidential papers.

Manasseh Cutler's botanical journals form a significant part of the archival collection and serve to illustrate some of the many interests of one of the University's founders. Also in Cutler's own handwriting are volumes of sermons and a number of his "commonplace books."

In another section of the storage area are shelves and filing cases containing photographs, negatives, maps and flags. One tightly furled scroll unwinds to reveal a five-foot long photo showing every individual — student, faculty, staff — on campus in 1922. Here too are to be found mementos ranging from George Beaton's 1904 Cutler Hall Homecoming plate to the 7-Up bottle that in 1974 commemorated OU's 170th year.

Southeastern Ohio also is well represented in rows of county and local histories and in an extensive collection of photographs and materials documenting the impact of coal mining on the region.

In 1943 a particularly rich private collection was given to the Archives by W. E. Peters. Author, surveyor and indefatigable searcher out of local history, Peters also donated the 26 Athens County range books he compiled.

The current national interest in preserving the past and searching out genealogies has brought the Archives a growing number of inquiries. Those from scholars have also increased since the University became one of eight institutions that form the Ohio Network of American History Research Centers, and more are expected once the Archives completes setting up of shelf space for the records of the City of Athens.

On the Cover

Photographs from the University Archives show three decades of snow on campus. In clockwise order are Baker Center, framed in 1963's snow-laden branches, by Jon Webb '66; Cutler Hall under a 1950's winter sun, by Dana F. Vibberts '54, MFA '66; and the old campus gate, with coeds in regulation late '40's bobby sox, and East Green rooflines highlighted with snow, both by unknown photographers.

In This Issue

On pages 8 and 9, Susan C. Frampton '72, MA '73, reveals that the Libyan desert is the site of irrigation systems and well fields (and could even be the site of an alumni chapter) — all planned by Libyan and American graduates of OU's hydrology program. On page 14, Bill Bert, a junior in the School of Journalism, recounts news of some graduates of the master's degree program in sports administration. On other pages, alumni are asked to assist in the recruitment effort and to up-date their files for the Alumni Records Office and give their views on alumni publications.

University Update

Charles J. Ping, the 18th president of Ohio University, will be inaugurated in ceremonies Saturday, March 5. The weekend will also serve as an occasion to honor Edwin Kennedy, alumnus, former trustee, and longtime benefactor of the University.

The inaugural weekend activities will begin with a Friday afternoon symposium on the role of students in government, politics, consumer research and social movements. Organized through the Office of Student Life, the symposium will highlight the wide range of interests and viewpoints represented in the present student body.

Friday evening the Kennedy Lecture Series will sponsor Dr. Philip Handler, president of the American Academy of Science and personal friend of President Ping.

On Saturday morning Ping will follow his inaugural address and, following that, luncheon will be held for delegates from other universities and out-of-town guests. Vernon R. Alden, OU president from 1962 to 1969, will offer remarks.

Kennedy and his wife will be honored at a Saturday evening dinner at which John C. Baker, OU president from 1945 to 1962, will be the speaker.

The dinner will be attended by the University's Distinguished Professors and past recipients of the Distinguished Professor Scholarship.

The first recipients of the Thomas and Edna Wolfe Scholarships are currently being selected by the University.

Mrs. Wolfe's will provided that six scholarships be established in the name of her late husband, Thomas M. Wolfe, '19, professor emeritus of finance at the University and president of the Athens National Bank for 10 years until his death in 1961.

Each year the scholarships will go to the three juniors and three seniors with the highest grade point averages who fall into one of three categories—a conservation or ecology major, a member of Phi Beta Kappa from the College of Arts and Sciences, and a student in the College of Business Administration.

The junior awards are for $250 and the seniors receive $750.

Another gift from Mrs. Wolfe, prior to her death, was the Thomas M. Wolfe Memorial Garden between Cutler Hall and Alden Library which was completed in 1970.

The University is now offering a bachelor of criminal justice degree which is designed to build on to two-year associate degree programs in law enforcement, corrections, police science and police administration.

Expected to attract students nationwide, the program was started Jan. 1.

Graduates of the program will be prepared for careers in enforcement, juristic and correctional agencies at the local, state, federal and private level.

The degree also is designed for persons already working in the criminal justice field for use as a form of mid-career training.

In an election held Feb. 11 and 12, the University's faculty rejected collective bargaining by a 40 vote margin. Ninety-three per cent of those eligible voted, with 354 against and 314 for collective bargaining.

Dr. Norman Cohn, dean of the Graduate College and director of research, spent three weeks in January visiting universities and institutions in Malaysia and Japan which have ties with the University.

While visiting the MARA Institute in Malaysia, he assisted former OU President Harry B. Crewson in his efforts to establish a master's degree program in economic education at MARA.

from the Alumni Director

Two former Ohio University alumni directors, Clark Williams and Dave Scott, recently moved from Athens.

Clark and his wife, Marie, headed for Portsmouth, Ohio, while Dave and Mary Scott are pursuing an adventure with the Whittaker Corp., which will take them to Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

Before they left Athens, your alumni association hosted farewell parties for these men who had served the University so ably.

I noticed the identical sense of pride exhibited by Clark and Dave, and after serving as alumni director for six months, I more fully understand their feelings.

Alumni directors are in a unique position, exposed daily to the activities of students, staff and faculty, as well as to the alumni whom they represent. At Ohio University it doesn't take long to learn that the educational and human resources of the institution are enormous, and one soon experiences pride in being a part of it all.

One way you as an alumnus can come to understand the strengths of Ohio University is through taking an active part in your alumni organization. You can enjoy the association with your fellow alumni while sharing in the accomplishments of Ohio University, past, present and future.

I am convinced you would enjoy being a part of our alumni activities. For the name of the nearest contact in your area, please write me at P.O. Box 1804, Athens, Ohio 45701.

Fund To Honor Considine

Through The Ohio University Fund, Inc., the College of Communication and the School of Journalism have been chosen to oversee The Bob Considine Scholarship Fund. Created by a committee of his colleagues and associates with the approval of Mrs. Considine, the fund will be a permanent memorial to the newspaperman who also was one of America's most beloved authors and columnists.

The fund committee—whose membership consists of persons such as Walter Cronkite, John Chancellor, William R. Hearst Jr., Art Buchwald, Jim Bishop, Toots Shor and Earl Wilson—will work with trustees of the fund to contact the many friends of Considine worldwide. A drive chaired by Cronkite was launched nationally in late January.

The Considine Fund will provide a full annual scholarship at Ohio University for a senior whose academic record is outstanding. In the event there are sufficient funds to endow two full scholarships, the second will provide for a Considine Internship in Ohio University's unique foreign correspondence program.

Created in 1936, the widely read column "On the Line with Bob Considine" brought the newsmen national attention. As a war correspondent during World War II, he traveled from North Africa to the Pacific to the China-Burma-India Theater. Later, he covered Korea and scored a spectacular scoop on the Eisenhower-MacArthur discussions for the Korean settlement.

A friend of kings, generals, diplomats, sports figures and presidents, Considine covered such figures as Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon. During 1975, his interviews with President Gerald Ford ran on page one of The New York Times. Additionally, several of the 24 books he authored or coauthored have been widely read. Among these are Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo, The Babe Ruth

Cronkite

Considine

Story, Ripley, The Modern Marco Polo and his last work, The Remarkable Life of Dr. Armand Hammer.

Considine died just four days following his being honored by the Overseas Press Club in September, 1975. Overseer of the Considine fund and coordinator for the scholarship, which will first be awarded in May of this year, is John Wilhelm, dean of the College of Communication, friend of Considine and former president of the Overseas Press Club.

From the Ohio University Fund, Inc.

In the last issue of the Alumni Journal we discussed the establishment of The First Trust Company of Ohio as the agent for The Ohio University Fund, Inc., in administering charitable remainder trusts and pooled income funds which are given for the benefit of Ohio University with life income retained by the donor. A specific example of the Two Life Unitrust was provided.

In this issue I want to cover, in general terms, the reasons and benefits for such trusts and how they can benefit you, an alumnus or friend of the University.

Created by the U.S. Congress through the 1969 Tax Reform Act, they are now the only acceptable trust instruments which qualify for income and estate tax deductions while providing income for the life of the donor or donor/spouse. Charitable income trusts established before 1969 must be updated to meet the new regulations to qualify for estate tax deductions.

What, in simple terms, are these instruments? A charitable remainder Unitrust pays you an amount each year determined by multiplying a fixed percentage, say 6 per cent, by the fair market value of the trust assets as evaluated each year. An annuity trust pays you a predetermined fixed dollar amount annually for the rest of your life. In both instances the annual payment must be at least 5 per cent. You can get the pleasure of making your charitable gift now, plus receiving more tax advantages than a gift through a will.

The pooled income fund enables you to make an investment which will be combined with gifts of others making similar life income gifts. In essence, you purchase shares or units of the pool which will determine your annual share of the pooled income fund earnings each year. Too, you take a sizeable charitable deduction from your federal income tax return, the amount being determined by official Treasury tables which discount your gift by the value of your life income interest. The exact amount depends on your age and the earning experience of the pooled fund.

Additional benefits accruing to you in each of the above cases include the ability to fund the trusts or pooled fund with appreciated securities while avoiding capital gains taxes or converting "locked-in" situations with low yield or income securities to higher annual income.

Members of The Ohio University Fund board of trustees or the development staff will be pleased to explore with you and your advisers the best way to make your gift.

Next issue: The Charitable Remainder Annuity Trust.

Alumni Aid Admissions Effort

Dr. James C. Walters, who became OU's director of admissions last August, is convinced a university's alumni are one of its most valuable recruiting aids.

He is impressed with the fact that more than 200 OU alumni are actively working in recruiting programs, which have as a major goal the stabilization of the University's enrollment.

The effort includes programs both on campus and at locations throughout Ohio. This winter, New York City and Pittsburgh will also be the sites of area student receptions planned by alumni groups.

Over 800 prospective students came to Athens for fall weekend programs—touring the campus, learning about academic areas and financial aids, talking with OU students and attending Bobcat football games.

According to Dr. Walters, these carefully orchestrated weekends are based on the belief that the variety and quality of the University's academic programs and support services and the beauty of the campus and the region will sell themselves to prospective students. Four such week-

The other half of the recruiting effort takes the University to the local community. Visits to six Ohio cities are on the agenda, with alumni participation an essential element.

Under the direction of an area coordinator, alumni take responsibility for all local arrangements and publicity and are on hand to add their views of campus life to those given by the faculty, students and administrators who journey from Athens for the receptions.

Dr. Walters and his staff are aware that many alumni retain a strong interest in the University but do not have the time to work directly with recruiting.

The blank below is printed to help these graduates contribute by sending names of potential students from high schools and two-year institutions to the Admissions Office in Chubb Hall.

I wish to suggest the Office of Admissions contact the following young people about Ohio University:

Attention HSS Alumni

While planning a get-together for OU grads at the American Speech and Hearing Association national convention, the School of Hearing and Speech Sciences encountered many difficulties in finding current addresses of its alumni. Some of the problem stemmed from the change-over of the school from the College of Fine Arts to the College of Communication in 1968; prior to that year, degrees did not specify HSS affiliation and computer print-out listings for pre-1968 grads are not yet available.

HSS would like to keep in touch with its grads to share information on workshops, enrichment programs and alumni gatherings. Alumni are asked to send names, current addresses, year of graduation and degree to Dr. Donald Fucci, director of the School of Hearing and Speech Sciences, Lindley Hall, Athens, Ohio 45701.

National Winner

Jan Radak, a magazine journalism major at OU, was recently chosen as the recipient of the Women in Communications, Inc., National Scholarship.

The $500 scholarship, to be used by Miss Radak during her senior year, is awarded nationally to one student each year in competition sponsored by the WICI Chicago professional chapter.

Miss Radak is world editor for the Ohio University Post and is a member of the campus chapters of the Society of Professional Journalists and Women in Communications, Inc.

Excellence Remarkd

The Society of Professional Journalists has named Athens, a quarterly magazine published by OU students, the 1975 winner of its Mark of Excellence award for the best college-produced magazine in the nation.

The quarterly includes articles on the history of the city and the area as well as on current happenings and issues. Subscriptions are $2 per year and adviser to the all-student staff is Byron Scott, assistant professor of journalism.

Applications Up

For the first time in four years, the number of freshman applications to the University is running ahead of the previous year's rate.

Director of Admissions James C. Walters reported that applications are 20 per cent above the number received last year and projected a 1976 freshman class of 2,800, an increase of 400 over fall, 1975.

He also said that on-campus programs for prospective students have attracted twice as many high school students as in 1974 and noted that OU admissions staff members have visited 90 per cent of Ohio's high schools and come away feeling optimistic because of the large numbers attending their presentations.

London Conference

The chairman of the University's Department of Comparative Arts, Dr. Robert Wortman, was one of 25 Benjamin Franklin Fellows of the Royal Society of Arts invited to a conference in London opening the British observance of the American Bicentennial.

The conference was sponsored by the Royal Society of Arts, the British Museum and the Royal Institute of British Architects, in cooperation with the House of Commons.

Dr. Wortman serves as corresponding member of the Royal Society of Arts for Ohio and Midwestern States. OU is one of 10 American universities authorized to present the society's silver medal for outstanding academic achievement to a graduating senior in the College of Fine Arts. Carol Stinson, who received her bachelor of music degree last June, was the 1975 recipient.

Bicentennial Contest

The University has been selected as a regional center by the Ohio American Revolution Bicentennial Advisory Commission for its statewide History Day Contest.

Theme for the contest is "Images of America: A Bicentennial Mirror of People, Places, Ideas or Events," and will involve judging papers, displays, performances and presentations on this theme by junior and senior high school students. Coordinator for OU's 13-county region is Dr. Marvin Fletcher, associate professor of history.

The program is produced in cooperation with the Ohio Department of Education and the Ohio Academy of History and funded by grants from the Martha Holden Jennings Foundation and the George Gund Foundation.

Memorial Fund

A memorial fund has been established by faculty and students of the School of Music to honor Sally Comin Kaneshige, a member of the music faculty from 1956 until her death on Nov. 23, 1975.

Mrs. Kaneshige graduated from the College of Wooster with departmental honors in music and earned a master's degree from the Eastman School of Music. At Ohio University she was known as a dedicated teacher, and she served also as a member of the School of Music executive committee and organized and directed its faculty chamber music series.

She was active in the symphony orchestra, played viola in ensembles, and accompanied performers.

She was the wife of Dr. Harry Kaneshige, professor of civil engineering, and the mother of two sons. Those wishing to contribute to the Sally Comin Kaneshige Music Scholarship Fund may do so c/o The OU Fund, Inc., Box 869, Athens, Ohio 45701.

Trustees Academy

Mr. and Mrs. Holden

Nateman

Pugh

Sauber

Snider

In recent months the Trustees Academy has added the following names to its roster of individuals whose substantial financial gifts help underwrite University programs:

Ellsworth J. '33 and Evelyn Underwood Holden '31, MA '33, have divided their TA membership between the College of Business Administration and the track program. Before his retirement, Holden had been head of the business department at Rhodes High School in Cleveland for 30 years. He was also track coach for 28 years and was among the first group elected to the Ohio Track Coaches Hall of Fame. Mrs. Holden is associated with her husband in the life insurance business. One of the couple's four children, Ellsworth Jr., is a member of OU's business faculty.

Dr. Dwight Pugh, chairman of the University's Department of Administrative Sciences, is the representative to the Academy for the membership of Baron Men's Shop, of which he is an owner. The membership is restricted for use by the administrative sciences department. Pugh, who joined the faculty in 1969, earned his undergraduate and graduate degrees from OU. He has twice been chosen a University Professor.

Gary M. Nateman '59 is vice president-associate general counsel for the United States Brewers Association, Inc., serving as head of the legal department and supervising five lawyers at association headquarters and representatives in 47 states. He earned his LL.B. degree from George Washington University and is a member of the American Bar Association. His membership is unrestricted.

Pat Sauber, owner of the McDonald's restaurant in Athens, has designated his TA membership for use by the Telecommunications Center. A graduate of the University of Akron, Sauber served as the 1975-76 chairman of the Ohio University Athens Business Drive and is an active member of a number of service clubs. He and his wife, Carol, are the parents of four children.

Mark Snider graduated from Otterbein College in 1971 and came to Athens as district manager/agent for Mutual Life of New York. In college he was on the wrestling team and was a member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. He is a member of the Jaycees, and both he and his wife, Rita, are active church members. They have a daughter, Betsy. Snider's TA membership is unrestricted.

Desert Attracts Alumni

Don't be surprised if the next OU Alumni Association chapter springs up in the Libyan desert.

Ohio University graduates, both American and Libyan, are well represented among Libyan government employes designing water well fields and irrigation systems for the Sahara.

They're also searching for new mineral resources and helping settle new areas of the desert as part of the Libyan government's effort to diversify the country's oil-based economy.

The former OU students are primarily graduates of the University's master's degree program in hydrology. That degree was formalized in 1969 when Dr. Moid Ahmad, a hydrologist with a United Nations project in Kuwait, was hired to teach in the Geology Department. Because of his established reputation as a U.N. consultant on water projects, his presence at OU attracted Libyans who came to the United States for advanced study.

He also became a good job contact for American students who upon completion of their studies are willing to endure the arid climate and foreign culture in exchange for a rare job opportunity and a chance to travel.

Jeff Risner '75 of McArthur, Ohio, was finishing his bachelor's degree in geology when Ahmad approached him about working as a hydrogeologist for the Libyan government.

"I thought about it for five seconds and said yes," Risner recalled. The next thing he knew he was flying over the Sahara and getting an idea of just how vast the desert is.

"We flew for three hours and all I could see in any direction was sand," Risner said. "Sometimes I think I wouldn't be surprised if a UFO landed because the place we work at looks like something out of a science fiction movie."

The temperature is real enough, though, sometimes climbing to 130 degrees which, according to Risner, can cause a person's body to lose about a gallon of water a day without any real physical effort.

Risner feels enduring the climate has been well worth it because he has had such a valuable job experience in Libya.

"At age 24 I've been in a supervisory job for $30-$40 million projects and have learned a lot about well drilling and construction. In the U.S. it would take a person until 35 to do that," he said.

Lloyd Horvath MS '74 and Larry Holland MS '76 who also made job contacts through Ahmad and their fellow students from Libya, are both working with Risner at the Kufra Settlement in the Central Sahara.

Directed by another OU graduate, Ali Eddib of Libya, the settlement project involves the construction of new villages which will eventually be populated by nomadic people from the northern part of the country. To sustain the villagers, water well fields are being built to irrigate 25,000 acres of the desert for the growing of grain and the raising of sheep.

The water, which lies far below the desert surface, is from a vast underground supply left there during the Ice Age. Prudent use of that fossil water is critical since the supply will not be replenished by rainfall.

Holland accepted the Libyan assignment before finishing his master's degree, but with the research he's been able to do in Libya on well efficiencies and well design, he expects to have his thesis completed this summer.

Both Holland and Horvath were accompanied by their wives when they first went to Libya, but both women are now back in the United States. Horvath said the Libyan attitude toward women dictated that they stay at home most of the time and never go out in public alone. American women and other foreigners are seen in the cities but are forced by the strict social customs of the Libyans to live somewhat restricted lives.

While living in Kufra, Horvath, Holland and Risner have maintained close contact with Ohio University through professors who visit Libya. Ahmad has been there in his capacity as a government consultant as recently as December. Two other Geology Department faculty, Dr. Stanley Fisher and Dr. Robert Yeats, have also visited Libya within the last three months to direct the graduate study of Libyans currently enrolled at OU.

Ahmad's December trip was primarily to check work at the Sarir oasis where a water well field is being built according to a design he developed with his students.

Another OU graduate, Bill Bocskosky '74, is employed at the Sarir site. The 300-well development, near Libya's important oil field, will be the largest in North Africa and the Middle East.

The trips by Fisher and Yeats were made as part of their regular responsibilities in supervising the field work of students working on master's theses. Their trips to the Libyan sites were paid for by the Libyan Industrial Research Center, which provides the scholarships for Libyan students.

Fisher made his first trip in September to check the progress of Mohammed Megerisi, who is looking for phosphate deposits in the Gebel Nefusah southwest of Tripoli. This valuable resource used in the making of fertilizer has not yet been found in large quantities in Libya but is common in nearby North African countries.

Yeats made the trip in October to advise his student Abdoorhman Doughri in a search for iron ore and radioactive elements in the mountains of the southeast corner of Libya.

Because of the training the Libyan students who majored in hydrology at Ohio University received, other Libyans have followed — with scholarships from their governments — to study in other areas such as petroleum geology and economic geology. If past experience is an indication, OU graduates — Libyan and American — will continue to find jobs in the desert and make an African alumni chapter a reality.

Iron tracks are used when trucks get stuck in the desert sand dunes

From Campus to Front Office

One employe of the Cincinnati Reds seldom got to see the championship team in action last season, for while Pete Rose was making clutch plays on the field, Terry Barthelmas '63, MEd '71, director of stadium operations, was busy observing stadium personnel.

Barthelmas got his job with the Reds after serving an internship with the club while a student in Ohio University's sports administration program. He is one of approximately 30 OU graduates employed by professional teams or leagues.

The OU master's degree program has had great success in placing graduates, according to Dr. William G. Stewart, the program's director.

Even in a tight job market, 13 fall quarter graduates have found jobs with such organizations as Madison Square Garden; the Indiana Pacers of the American Basketball Association; Veterans Stadium in Philadelphia; Frostburg (Md.) State College; Louisiana State University; the Boise (Idaho) A's, a minor league baseball team; the University of Washington; and the Malaysia Department of Sports.

Dr. Stewart is responsible for much of this success as he continually finds valuable internships for sports administration students.

One of the latest developments involves Jim Snyder, Bobcat basketball coach of 25 years, and Dave Scott, former OU alumni director and one-time Bobcat cage star. These men have been chosen to develop a national sports program in Saudi Arabia. They hope to use OU interns and graduates in the program which is designed to make the country competitive at the international level.

Another valuable feature of the sports administration program is its sponsoring of guest speakers from all areas of sports.

In the fall speakers included Don Weiss, director of public relations for the National Football League; Dr. Joe Hoy, athletic director at Western Michigan University; and Bob Baur, an NFL referee for 13 years.

Gary Nickels, a sports administration graduate employed as a minor league administrator with the Philadelphia Phillies, has scheduled a visit during the winter quarter.

In addition to these speakers, who often interview students for internships and jobs while visiting the campus, a symposium is conducted each year to provide additional information for students. Special speakers and graduates of the program head discussion groups intended to give students a look at the experiences, activities, duties and responsibilities that the future graduate may encounter.

Some of the stories to be related may include one by Mike Manning and Dean Taylor of the Boise A's. When rain drenched the baseball field during their internships, the two were forced to produce a dry field or postpone the game and lose money. Finally, the two decided to burn tires soaked with gasoline to dry the surface. The plan worked, although it prompted a visit from the local fire department, but the foul odor created by the experiment kept many of the fans away anyway.

The OU program was developed in 1967 by Dr. James G. Mason from an idea of Los Angeles Dodger magnate Walter O'Malley and is offered through the School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation.

The pioneer in the field, the program remains the most established in the eyes of many sports administrators.

Bob Wirz, director of information for major league baseball, has said, "The best developed program in sports administration that I know of is at Ohio University."

Don Weiss of the NFL has remarked, "We are sold on the Ohio University sports administration program, especially so after having interns from this program for parts of the last three years."

The first of five women to finish the program was Tina Serednesky

'72, who is presently employed as recreational supervisor by Deerwood Management Corp., a Columbus firm that owns condominiums. She also has worked for the Continental Racquet Club.

Despite the great interest from all areas, the program has chosen to remain small. Dr. Stewart said it will be expanded only when job opportunities grow. This policy permits only 25 of about 300 students seeking admission each year to enroll.

Those admitted select from course offerings as varied as their backgrounds. Three quarters of classroom work and at least a three-month internship are required for graduation; however, only two physical education classes are mandatory. Elective courses include classes in management, economics, journalism, psychology and education.

The need for graduates trained in these areas is becoming more apparent with the growth of big-time sports. While some owners demand that employees advance through the ranks, many others see the need for specialized administrative training and look to Ohio University for their future front-office executives.

Tina Serednesky and her brother Chuck, also a Sports Administration Program graduate.

Sports Roundup

The Bobcat basketball squad became the dark horse of the Mid-American Conference, winning its first four league games before losing to Miami, Toledo and Western Michigan. Victories over Central Michigan, Bowling Green, Ball State and Eastern Michigan had put the 'Cats in the thick of the conference race. Leading scorers in the early going were Scott Love (16.2 points per game), Steve Skaggs (10.5 ppg) and Chuck Seltzer (10.3 ppg).

Harry Houska's wrestling team began its quest for a seventh straight Mid-American Conference title by winning its first five league matches by substantial margins. Andy Daniels (118), Dave Hopkins (126) and Gus Malavite (150) were all unbeaten and untied.

Mike Borden, the junior varsity basketball player who was barred from competition by the University medical staff because he has only one eye, was reinstated after the U.S. District Court issued a temporary restraining order allowing him to play. In the freshman's first two games, he scored 40 points and collected 28 rebounds.

Mike Green, punter and wide receiver for Bill Hess's football squad, played in the East-West Shrine game Jan. 3. For the Bobcats Green averaged 41.8 yards a punt and as a receiver caught 50 passes for 642 yards and three touchdowns to rank thirteenth in the nation. The Athens native was named special mention All-America punter by The Sporting News.

Dale Schumacher, OU's athletic business manager for 12 years, was named "District Four Athletic Business Manager of the Year" by the College Athletic Business Managers of America. District Four includes 34 mid-western colleges.

The women's basketball team recorded its first win of the season over previously unbeaten Dayton 66-63 to raise its record to 1-2. Squad leaders include Mary Ann Stocker (19 points against Dayton), Pat Lilienthal and Nancy Thorne.

New Track To Honor Dr. Goldsberry

The new all-weather track now being installed in Peden Stadium has been named the "Blaine R. Goldsberry Track" by the board of trustees in honor of the former OU athlete and team physician who was the major donor for the project.

Dr. Goldsberry, now 83 and bed-ridden, was a practicing physician in Athens for over 50 years and physician for Ohio University's athletic teams for 35 years.

During his undergraduate days at OU, Dr. Goldsberry won two basketball letters and captained the 1914 team his senior year. In 1966 he was inducted into the Ohio University Athletic Hall of Fame.

Dr. Goldsberry has noted that the happiest years of his life were those when he was "taking care of our athletic teams." He has said too that he formed friendships in those days that have remained with him through the years. One of those was with Don Peden, for whom the stadium was named.

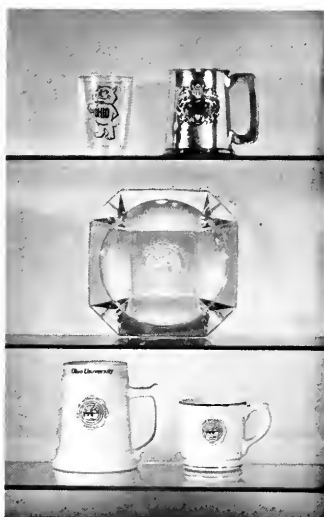

Chief of Staff of Sheltering Arms Hospital in Athens from the time it was organized in 1921, Dr. Goldsberry was also the hospital's first radiologist. He later held that position at O'Brien Memorial Hospital, the successor to Sheltering Arms.

At O'Brien's radiological center is named in his honor. Among his other honors is a certificate from the Ohio State Medical Society in recognition of his 50 years of service. That service also included terms as president of the Athens City-County Board of Health and of the Athens County Medical Society.

His latest contribution to the University is further evidence of what Dr. Goldsberry himself has termed "a great sense of loyalty both to the town and to the University."

Athletic Director William Rohr noted that the track, to be ready by July, will be an asset to the University and Athens communities as well as to the athletic teams.

Osteopathic College To Open in Fall

"The difficult we do immediately, the impossible takes a little longer," is the Air Force motto adopted by the staff assigned to establish within one year Ohio University's College of Osteopathic Medicine.

Authorized last summer by the state legislature, development of the new college is moving at a pace normally unseen in the worlds of academic programming and state-funded renovations.

Acting Dean Gerald A. Faverman was appointed in late September and immediately began assembling a planning staff and committees to develop a medical curriculum, admissions procedures and financial assistance for students.

Borrowing from his experience as an administrator in planning and developing the College of Osteopathic Medicine at Michigan State University, Dr. Faverman has methodically clicked off initial deadlines.

Application forms were distributed and almost 300 completed applications were received by the mid-January cutoff date. From this list of applicants, 24 students will be chosen for the first class, with priority—beyond high academic qualifications—going to Ohio residents planning to enter family practice in the state. Entering classes will grow to 100 by 1986.

The curriculum committee of University faculty members and D.O.s from across the state is putting final touches to a four-year program of study that will be reviewed for accreditation by the American Osteopathic Association's Committee on Colleges the end of March.

Also on schedule are renovation plans for Grosvenor Hall on the West Green which will become the home of the new college. All architectural plans are now complete and actual renovation is expected to begin in late March.

The first of the two phases of the $3.8 million renovation project includes transforming the first floor kitchen and dining areas of the former residence and dining hall into lecture halls and gross anatomy, pathology and multi-disciplinary laboratories. These will be completed by September 1 and will provide the instructional facilities needed to open the college.

Phase II of the renovation, to begin after classes get under way, will provide additional laboratory areas, clinical, office and support spaces and animal housing areas.

The availability of Grosvenor Hall for renovation into a medical building permits the one-year timetable for opening the college. It also promises a comparatively low-cost renovation.

Already tiled kitchen areas and terrazzo floors will convert into facilities which would be perhaps prohibitively expensive to duplicate.

A comparable facility constructed anew could reasonably be expected to cost between $15 and $20 million, or at least four times as much as the complete renovation.

Looking ahead, the college is already signing affiliation agreements with osteopathic and joint-staff hospitals across the state. Through a regional medical center program, third and fourth year students will combine classroom instruction with exposure to specialty and family medical practice.

The entire plan has been an ambitious one, but with cooperation from the campus, the state legislature and the osteopathic medical community, the opening of the college in September seems assured.

Attention HSS Alumni

While planning a get-together for OU grads at the American Speech and Hearing Association national convention, the School of Hearing and Speech Sciences encountered many difficulties in finding current addresses of its alumni. Some of the problem stemmed from the change-over of the school from the College of Fine Arts to the College of Communication in 1968; prior to that year, degrees did not specify HSS affiliation and computer print-out listings for pre-1968 grads are not yet available.

HSS would like to keep in touch with its grads to share information on workshops, enrichment programs and alumni gatherings. Alumni are asked to send names, current addresses, year of graduation and degree to Dr. Donald Fucci, director of the School of Hearing and Speech Sciences, Lindley Hall, Athens, Ohio 45701.

National Winner

Jan Radak, a magazine journalism major at OU, was recently chosen as the recipient of the Women in Communications, Inc., National Scholarship.

The $500 scholarship, to be used by Miss Radak during her senior year, is awarded nationally to one student each year in competition sponsored by the WICI Chicago professional chapter.

Miss Radak is world editor for the Ohio University Post and is a member of the campus chapters of the Society of Professional Journalists and Women in Communications, Inc.

Excellence Remarkd

The Society of Professional Journalists has named Athens, a quarterly magazine published by OU students, the 1975 winner of its Mark of Excellence award for the best college-produced magazine in the nation.

The quarterly includes articles on the history of the city and the area as well as on current happenings and issues. Subscriptions are $2 per year and adviser to the all-student staff is Byron Scott, assistant professor of journalism.

Applications Up

For the first time in four years, the number of freshman applications to the University is running ahead of the previous year's rate.

Director of Admissions James C. Walters reported that applications are 20 per cent above the number received last year and projected a 1976 freshman class of 2,800, an increase of 400 over fall, 1975.

He also said that on-campus programs for prospective students have attracted twice as many high school students as in 1974 and noted that OU admissions staff members have visited 90 per cent of Ohio's high schools and come away feeling optimistic because of the large numbers attending their presentations.

London Conference

The chairman of the University's Department of Comparative Arts, Dr. Robert Wortman, was one of 25 Benjamin Franklin Fellows of the Royal Society of Arts invited to a conference in London opening the British observance of the American Bicentennial.

The conference was sponsored by the Royal Society of Arts, the British Museum and the Royal Institute of British Architects, in cooperation with the House of Commons.

Dr. Wortman serves as corresponding member of the Royal Society of Arts for Ohio and Midwestern States. OU is one of 10 American universities authorized to present the society's silver medal for outstanding academic achievement to a graduating senior in the College of Fine Arts. Carol Stinson, who received her bachelor of music degree last June, was the 1975 recipient.

Bicentennial Contest

The University has been selected as a regional center by the Ohio American Revolution Bicentennial Advisory Commission for its statewide History Day Contest.

Theme for the contest is "Images of America: A Bicentennial Mirror of People, Places, Ideas or Events," and will involve judging papers, displays, performances and presentations on this theme by junior and senior high school students. Coordinator for OU's 13-county region is Dr. Marvin Fletcher, associate professor of history.

The program is produced in cooperation with the Ohio Department of Education and the Ohio Academy of History and funded by grants from the Martha Holden Jennings Foundation and the George Gund Foundation.

Memorial Fund

A memorial fund has been established by faculty and students of the School of Music to honor Sally Comin Kaneshige, a member of the music faculty from 1956 until her death on Nov. 23, 1975.

Mrs. Kaneshige graduated from the College of Wooster with departmental honors in music and earned a master's degree from the Eastman School of Music. At Ohio University she was known as a dedicated teacher, and she served also as a member of the School of Music executive committee and organized and directed its faculty chamber music series.

She was active in the symphony orchestra, played viola in ensembles, and accompanied performers.

She was the wife of Dr. Harry Kaneshige, professor of civil engineering, and the mother of two sons. Those wishing to contribute to the Sally Comin Kaneshige Music Scholarship Fund may do so c/o The OU Fund, Inc., Box 869, Athens, Ohio 45701.

University Update

Charles J. Ping, the 18th president of Ohio University, will be inaugurated in ceremonies Saturday, March 5. The weekend will also serve as an occasion to honor Edwin Kennedy, alumnus, former trustee, and long-time benefactor of the University.

The inaugural weekend activities will begin with a Friday afternoon symposium on the role of students in government, politics, consumer research and social movements.

Friday evening the Kennedy Lecture Series will sponsor Dr. Philip Handler, president of the American Academy of Science and personal friend of President Ping.

On Saturday morning Ping will deliver his inaugural address and, following that, luncheon will be held for delegates from other universities and out-of-town guests. Vernon R. Alden, OU president from 1962 to 1969, will offer remarks.

Kennedy and his wife will be honored at a Saturday evening dinner at which John C. Baker, OU president from 1945 to 1962, will be the speaker.

The dinner will be attended by the University's Distinguished Professors and past recipients of the Distinguished Professor Scholarship.

In an election held Feb. 11 and 12, the University's faculty rejected collective bargaining by a 40 vote margin. Ninety-three per cent of those eligible voted, with 354 against and 314 for collective bargaining.

The Board of Trustees voted in November to join the majority of the state's universities in raising student fees.

The $15 fee increase, effective winter quarter, included $10 added to the instructional fee, the first such increase in nearly four years, and a $5 addition to the general fee, the first increase in seven years.

The action followed similar increases at seven other state universities within the last year, and put the University's fees in the middle range of those charged at state universities.

The instructional fee is now $220 and the general fee is $55.

Increases in the number of new freshmen, graduate students and branch campus enrollees helped boost this fall's enrollment figures above estimates made last spring.

The main campus enrollment came in at 13,154. The freshman class was up 6 per cent from last year and was cited as evidence that the University's enrollment (which is down slightly from last year) is leveling off at a size which OU can expect to maintain.

A breakdown of the main campus enrollment shows 81 per cent of the students are from Ohio. There are 550 from overseas. About 89 per cent of the main campus enrollees are full-time students.

The University is now offering a bachelor of criminal justice degree which is designed to build on to two-year associate degree programs in law enforcement, corrections, police science and police administration.

Graduates of the program will be prepared for careers in enforcement, juristic and correctional agencies at the local, state, federal and private level.

The degree also is designed for persons already working in the criminal justice field for use as a form of mid-career training.

Dr. Norman Cohn, dean of the Graduate College and director of research, spent three weeks in January visiting universities and institutions in Malaysia and Japan which have ties with the University.

While visiting the MARA Institute in Malaysia, he assisted former OU President Harry B. Crewson in his efforts to establish a master's degree program in economic education at MARA.

From the Alumni Director

Jim Walters, who became OU's director of admissions last August, is convinced a university's alumni are one of its most valuable recruiting aids.

He is impressed with the fact that more than 200 OU alumni are actively working in recruiting programs, which have as a major goal the stabilization of the University's enrollment.

The effort includes programs both on campus and at locations throughout Ohio. This winter, New York City and Pittsburgh will also be the sites of area student receptions planned by alumni groups.

The other half of the recruiting effort takes the University to the local community. Visits to six Ohio cities are on the admissions agenda, with alumni participation essential.

Jim and his staff are aware that many alumni retain a strong interest in the University but do not have the time to work directly with recruiting. A way such graduates could help is through sending the names and addresses of prospective students from high schools and two-year institutions to the Admissions Office.

I want to say again that we regret that postage and printing costs have made it impossible for us to send the full 16-page Journal to all OU graduates twice a year. We hope the 4-page issues will serve as at least a tenuous link between you and the University. In case you've forgotten—six issues of the Journal and two of the Alumni Magazine are sent to those contributing $10 a year or more.

We've printed an alumni calendar on the back cover and hope to see some of you at the events listed. I am convinced you would enjoy being a part of our alumni activities. For the name of the nearest contact in your area, please write me at P.O. Box 1804, Athens, Ohio 45701.

OU Bobcat Winter Sports Roundup

The Bobcat basketball squad became the dark horse of the Mid-American Conference, winning its first four league games before losing to Miami, Toledo and Western Michigan. Victories over Central Michigan, Bowling Green, Ball State and Eastern Michigan had put the 'Cats in the thick of the conference race. Leading scorers in the early going were Scott Love (16.2 points per game), Steve Skaggs (10.5 ppg) and Chuck Seltzer (10.3 ppg).

Harry Houska's wrestling team began its quest for a seventh straight Mid-American Conference title by winning its first five league matches by substantial margins. Andy Daniels (118), Dave Hopkins (126) and Gus Malavite (150) were all unbeaten and untied.

Mike Green, punter and wide receiver for Bill Hess's football squad, played in the East-West Shrine game Jan. 3. For the Bobcats Green averaged 41.8 yards a punt and as a receiver caught 50 passes for 642 yards and three touchdowns to rank thirteenth in the nation. The Athens native was named special mention All-America punter by The Sporting News.

Dale Schumacher, OU's athletic business manager for 12 years, was named "District Four Athletic Business Manager of the Year" by the College Athletic Business Managers of America. District Four includes 34 mid-western colleges.

The women's basketball team recorded its first win of the season over previously unbeaten Dayton 66-63 to raise its record to 1-2. Squad leaders include Mary Ann Stocker (19 points against Dayton), Pat Lilienthal and Nancy Thorne.
